Only the lawless need fear the CIA

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the Op-ed articles, "Weather underground opens a door for the CIA ..." and "... but it should be open." The juxtaposition of these two contrasting viewpoints created a satisfying and stimulating format for the reader to absorb and evaluate what the writers were saying.

I must add that I am in agreement with Patrick J. Buchanan's opinion. Katherine Boudin, Judith Clark and company with their sordid associations with notorious international terrorist groups are the only ones who will suffer from the Reagan administration's bringing back the CIA for the purpose of surveillance of the domestic radical organizations here in the United States.

They are dangerous criminals. Law-abiding citizens will never have to fear that such investigations will violate their civil liberties. The time is ripe to bring back the ways and means of combating the seeds of terrorism before we harvest a bumper crop of terrorists similar to the ones in Britain, West Germany and South America.
